THE FRANCO-BRITISH TARIFF SITUATION

GERMAN EXTRAVAGANT SPENDING DENIED

Suspension of Work on New Cunard Liner

FRANCO - BRITISH

TARIFF SITUATION

Paris, December 14th
Following a conference between Laval and the British Ambassador, Lord Tyrrell, on Friday night, political observers are more optimistic on the likelihood of a compromise in certain phases of the Franco-British tariff situation.

It is understood that France has despatched a note to London and further conferences are expected.

GERMAN EXTRAVAGANT

SPENDING DENIED

Berlin, December 14th

The Minister of Commerce, Herr Hermann Warnhold, read to the North American Chamber of Commerce the speech by Herr Bruening, in which he vigorously defended Germany against the charge of carelessness in spending borrowed money.

In the course of his speech, Bruening said that if had become a common saying that United States money borrowed by Germany was mainly used to finance luxurious municipal buildings. The German Chancellor cited statistics in support of his refutation of the charge.

He admitted that loans had been floated in the belief that most of the world depression was over, and said: "This proved to be false, but we all deceived ourselves not one another. The crisis would not have assumed the dimensions it did, if creditors had not lost their nerve."

SUSPENSION OF NEW CUNARD LINER

London, December 14th

Notices have been posted at John Brown Company's shipyards at Clydebank suspending the building of the new giant 73,000 tons unnamed Cunard liner so terminating the employment of 2,500 men at noon on Saturday due to the uncertainty of the economic situation.

The Cunard Company is informing the shareholders that for the first time for years the company has failed to earn the depreciation of old ships. Sir Percy Bates the chairman, declares that building will be resumed as soon as possible.

Meanwhile in the House of Commons Mr. Kirkwood asked Mr. Runciman whether the Government would intervene to prevent the unemployment of many thousands as the result of the suspension.

Mr. Runciman replied that any idea of direct Government assistance was quite out of the question.

Cunard shares fell heavily on the Stock Exchange as a result of the suspension.

No official computation is available but Lloyds roughly estimate that the world's total idle shipping amounts to 9,000,000 tons.

FINLAND EMERGENCY

DECREES

Helsingfors, December 14th

The Government has introduced a bill into parliament authorizing the President of the Republic, until the end of 1932, after consultation with the Bank of Finland, to issue emergency economic decrees granting a temporary moratorium to banks in difficulties, restricting imports and decreasing budgetary expenditure.

GERMAN MILITARY CLUBS' SUBSIDIES

Basle, December 14th

The Advisory Committee of the Bank of International Settlements began a searching study into Germany's wealth abroad, a statement as to which was contained in the report of the Sub-Committee, Herr Melchior, the German delegate, gave evidence as to the Reichsbank's gold reserve.

The first week of the inquiry into Germany's capacity to pay produced voluminous evidence on the latter's part as to her budget deficit, preventing the payment of Reparations. A startling revelation in the budget was the vast expenditure on public instruction in regard to which the Committee asked for tabulated details. It was discovered that the German Government was subsidizing clubs and associations of a military character.

U. S. DEBT LEGISLATION

Washington, December 14th

The State and Treasury Departments have notified Congress that they will explain to the Government's owing war debts to the United States that although the payments are legally due on the 15th Congress not yet having ratified the moratorium—it being expected soon—nevertheless the moratorium may be considered effective, and no payments need be made.

THE CASE FOR TARIFFS

By Herbert S. Oakley

The immediate cause of the troubles from which England has suffered in the past few months is the fact that we have been buying more goods from abroad than we have been able to pay for. The so-called "adverse" balance of trade has become really adverse. For many years the value of imports has exceeded that of exports. We bought far more goods than we sold, paying for the difference by services rendered by our shipping, our bankers and our insurance companies, and by the income we received from our foreign investments.

Our services were in great demand, the income from our foreign investments was steadily growing, with the result that in 1931 we had a surplus of no less than £ 181,000,000 over and above all we needed, to pay for all the imports we purchased. This surplus, the successor to many similar surpluses in previous years, we used for obtaining further foreign investments and thus increasing still more the income we anticipated we should receive abroad.

It was indeed an extremely fortunate position. The average business man was quite content with it. There were prophets who pointed out to him the dangers surrounding the fiscal system then in operation. The world, they declared, was steadily becoming industrialised. The day would come when the markets for our goods would be difficult of access. Tariff walls were being built up all round us, with the object of fostering industries which in time would become direct competitors with our manufacturers. Our own open markets were being more and more monopolised by foreign manufacturers, while we were concentrating largely on certain basic industries such as the manufacture of cotton and woollentextiles, iron and steel manufactures, machinery and coal. "What does it matter?" said the average man. "The foreigner is supplying us with cheap goods. We are selling him our goods at remunerative prices. Profits are substantial. He is also paying us very well indeed for the use of the money we have lent him brings in a very comfortable income. Let well alone is our motto. Free trade has paid us well, and that's that."

II

Then came the War. We were thrown back on our own resources and we found that there were many things we urgently needed which were not being made by our manufacturers. We had relied on the foreigner for them because he had supplied them cheaper than it would have paid our manufacturers to make them. That was the first stage in opening our eyes to the dangers of an open market in a tariff-protected world. It was an unpleasant discovery, and as the process has continued throughout the post-war efforts at reconstruction, the weakness of our position has been more and more emphasised to us.

The War gave a tremendous impetus to the industrialisation of the world. Nations, which had been content to rely on us for many of their most important needs, found they could make them themselves with benefit to their own people. When we turned our attention from fighting to industry once more, we found many of our

They found what was wanted almost at once — a paper that was literally identical with the original, and Jim ordered half a dozen pieces. Then he started to stroll back towards his club. So far, so good: unfortunately it was not very far. The main part of the problem had still to be solved. To draw a faked substitute was now an easy matter, but how was he going to utilise it to the best advantage when he had done so?

If it could possibly be avoided he did not want the other side to find out that he knew anything about the map. At the same time his whole scheme depended on the fact that the other half of the map should be seen. It was useless merely getting the fake to them by some method: that would give only a negative result to each side. He turned it over from every angle and at length the only possible way out occurred to him. He was satisfied that the main idea was right. Judy Draycott was the only person who could do it, without giving things away. And if she did pull it off, and obtained a reasonable mental picture of the other half they would be in the pleasant position of having the truth, whilst the opponents possessed the map of an imaginary. At which point in his reflections he turned into his club to find his cousin waiting for him with a worried look on his face.

"She's gone, Jim", he said briefly.

"Come on into the smoking room", remarked Jim. "Now, then", he continued, after they had found two chairs, "what's this? You say she's gone. Where to?"

"Can't tell you, old lad", answered the other. "The house belongs to an ancient gorgon — Lady Somebody or other, with whom Judy is staying. Well, I blew in and asked for the girl, but the butler pushed me into the presence of the most devastating old ruin you've ever imagined. Shook me him. It might fail, but he would have to take the risk. Judy Draycott was the person who must do it.

Whether Dregler and his bunch knew that half had been sent to her or not didn't matter. It would arouse no suspicions in their minds when they found she had it in her possession. And so, somehow or other, she would have to contrive to see the other piece for long enough to memorise it roughly. Presumably it would be as simple and crude as the half he had, and given a minute or so to study it in, she should be able to reproduce it sufficiently accurately for them to have something to go on.

One weak point lay in the fact that they might not let her see the other part. Another was the difficulty of her approaching them, so to speak, out of the blue. Why should she know anything about them at all? He did not even know if she and Barnet were acquaintances. Still those were mibably, laddie, I don't mind admitting".

"Are you Mr. Maitland?" she boomed.

"I admitted the soft impeachment, and she inspected me though longnettes.

"I confess I do not understand present-day mentality", she went on, "but Judy's brian must have left her temporarily. She said you were very good-looking and had a magnificent figure".

"Well, I thought she might have put it a little differently, but the family spirit pulled me through.

"That's where you scratch the wrong bite", I said breezily. "She alluded to my cousin who, I have been told, does bear a slight resemblance to me. He belongs to one of the cadet branches of our family."

DAILYGRAMS.

The Delegates from Argentina and Brazilian to the Economical Conference meet today for the first time to discuss the question of commercial interchange and the best method of protecting their agricultural interests. One of the matters to be discussed will be that of the meat question, which is proving of such vital importance to the three countries, Argentina, Uruguay and Brazil. The project of a Commercial Treaty is to be drawn up and submitted to the respective Governments for approval.

Following Saturday's rain, Sunday was such a beautiful day that it was not surprising that many members of the British and American communities took the opportunity to visit the beaches. Atlántida, Solís, Piriapolis, and Punta del Este, were the most favoured by those owning motors.

From the "Daily Mirror" we learn that Mr. C. W. Campion, of The English Club, Montevideo, has drawn a prize of one hundred pounds sterling in the Irish Sweepstakes. Our congratulations Mr. Campion.

as happy as possible. This year we expect to have a greater number of men than in any of our previous years owing to so many ships laying up in the harbour. We are therefore making our usual appeal to our friends trusting they will come to our help this year in a most generous way with gifts of money and kind. All gifts will be acknowledged. Please send the same to Major Wilson the Sailor's Home calle Ituzaingó 1522.

Our programme is to give the men a good dinner and tea and if possible a small present finishing the day with a social evening.

HINT TO HARVEY

Harvey has been told time and again that had he and Shade fought their Albert Hall contest in America the California would have been awarded the decision.

Therefore, it is up to the Plymouth man to introduce all the aggressive action he can when meeting American boxes before American crowds.

Jack Hood is negotiating for another trip abroad. Following his second fight with Shade several New York managers cabled inducements for the Brum to "come over".

Hood is waiting for fuller particulars. He is not a stranger to American methods, and neither is Johnny Cuthbert, though the Sheffielder was not a matured champion when he last visited the States.

Cuthbert has seldom been seen to better advantage than in his bout with Al Foreman, when he endeavoured to wrest the light-weight title from Londoner.

TO MEET AGAIN?

This fight produced another unsatisfactory decision. Drawn verdicts satisfy nobody interested in the principals. Well, the best way to settle the controversy is for the pair to meet again.

I understand Teddy Baldock is anxious to meet Cuthbert for the latter's feather-weight title. Well I am sure that the champion is quite agreeable. But he is in the position to dictate the terms.

I do not think this match would prove such a big attraction as a return Cuthbert—Foreman light-weight championship bout.

NO CREAM transforms the skin. But scientific care, which encourages swift circulation through the tissues and keeps the skin cells vividly healthy, will make your skin clear, soft and firm. This is the foundation of the Elizabeth Arden method. Cleansing the skin—with Elizabeth Arden's Venetian Cleansing Cream—removes impurities which clog the pores and cause blackheads. Brisk patting—with Ardena Skin Tonic and Special Astringent—tones the skin and firms the contours. Nourishing—with Orange Skin Food or the delicate Velva Cream—fills out the skin cells and so corrects lines and wrinkles. Follow this same method in the care of your skin at home
