

witnessed by, it is estimated, about fifty thousand persons.

Sir Richard Burton, the well-known traveller and Orientalist, died on Monday morning. He had been British Consul at Trieste since 1872, and was in his 69th year.

Complaint has been made in New York of the practice of allowing census papers to be filled in by the servants of the family; but the system has found a defender on the ground of its tendency to improve the statistics and elevate the lower classes.

Law-tennis has long laboured under suspicion of favouring flirtation; but, regarded from this point of view, a writer in The Field assures us that golf really leaves it, as the sporting world say, nowhere.

«One seldom sees a pretty girl in Europe, and if one does, she is sure to be an American.» So says, in all the fragrance of print, a writer in a newspaper much read by the ladies of St. Louis, U. S. A.

«Only the chambermaids are pretty in England.» is the next ridiculous sentence. The English girl is tailor-made, says this scribe, who perhaps never expected to be read in England.

COMMERCIAL

Stock Exchange
Montevideo, November 25, 1890.
Closing quotations.
Gold, cash, 138.

The week has opened far from unfavourably, there being a fair amount of business and in a greater variety of stocks than usual, whilst prices generally were firm or even rising.

Let us do in gold, which opened 137 1/4, jumping to 138, where it closed after a few oscillations between these limits.

THE CURATE OF CHURNSIDE. A TALE
Walter Dene, deacon, in his faultless clerical coat and broad felt hat, strolled along slowly, sunning himself as he went, after his wont, down the pretty central lane of West Churnside.

It was just the idyllic village best suited to the taste of such an idyllic young curate as Walter Dene. There were cottages with low-hatched roofs, thickly overgrown with yellow stonecrop and pink houseleek; there were trellis-work porches up which the scented dog-rose and the fainter honeysuckle clambered together in sisterly rivalry; there were targeted gable-ends of Elizabethan farmhouses, quaintly varied with black oak joists and moulded plaster panels.

must not eat up all our capital at one extravagant feast, and then lament the want of interest ever afterward. Let us live another week in our first fool's paradise before we enter on the safer but less tremulous pleasures of sure possession.

«Poor child, poor child,» said Walter Dene tenderly. «She's a dear little thing, Mrs. Long, is your Nellie, and I hope she may yet be spared to you. I'll come and see her at once, and try if I can do anything to ease her.»

«He crossed the road compassionately with the tottering old grandmother, giving her his helping hand over the kerbstone, and following her with bated breath into the close little sick-room. Then he flung open the tiny casement with its diamond-lead panes, so as to let in the fresh summer air, and picked a few sprigs of sweet-briar from the porch, which he joined with the geranium from his own button-hole to make a tiny nosegay for the sick girl.

«She's a sweet little child,» he said to himself musingly, though I'm afraid she's not long for this world now; and the poor little girl, who seldom, and value them for the sake of the thoughtfulness they imply, rather than for the sake of the mere things themselves. I can order a bottle of calf's-foot at the grocer's, and Carter can set it in a mould without any trouble while as for the soup, some tinned mock-turtle and a little fresh stock makes a really capital mixture for this sort of thing.

«It costs so little to give these poor souls pleasure, and it is a great luxury to oneself undeniably. But, after all, what a funny trade it is to send an educated man to do! They set us up to Oxford or Cambridge, give us a distinct taste for Æschylus and Catullus, Dante and Milton, Mendelssohn and Chopin, good claret and olives farcies, and then bring us down to a country village, to look after the bodily and spiritual ailments of rheumatic old washerwomen! If it were not for poetry, flowers, and Christina, I really think I should succumb entirely!»

«He's a dear, good man, that he is, is young passion, murmured old Mary Long as Walter disappeared between the eaves; and he do love the poor and the zick, the same as if he was their own brother, God bless his soul, the dear, good vulla, vor all his kindness to our Nully!»
