public and to Generals Mitre, Lezvalle, Emilio Mitre, Cordero, Mansilla, Manuel J. Campos, Viejo, Anaya, Roca, Ayala, Gelly, Vedia J. Viejo, Benavides, Garcia, Arredondo, Quirno, Pico, Garmentia, Arias, Bernal, Diaz, Cerri, Biedma, Molina, Capdevila and Palacios and Vice Admiral B. Cordero.

General Luis Campos, in proposing the health of Dr. Pellegrini, told him that he had, during his remaining year of office, to fight two great battles, one against the financial crisis by reducing the public expenses and raising the standard of administrative morality, and the other by faithfully fulfilling the duty of establishing complete liberty of the suffrage so that his successor may be chosen by the free vote of the people.

During the evening the Señora de Campos obtained from Dr. Pellegrini the promise that the officers recently dismissed shall be restored to the army.—B. A. Herald.

SAILORS' HOME

To the Editor.

Dear Sir,
May I be allowed, through the medium of your paper, to ask a few questions of the subscribers to the Sailors' Home?

1. Do they know that all merchant seamen are denied admittance to the comforts afforded by the institution?
2. If it be that the navy seamen do not care to fraternize with the latter, should there not be some rooms set apart for their benefit?
3. Is it right that many a respectable man paid off here should not be able to avail himself of the home while waiting for another ship?
4. What is the definition of "SAILORS' HOME"?
5. How is the "SAILORS' HOME" to exist when H. M. Ships leave?
6. Will the present staff then be willing to care for the comfort of the less fortunate seamen?
7. In that case would it not be fairer that the merchant seamen should at once have a share in the benefits of the Sailors' Home?

Yours, etc.
Voz Populi, Voz Dei.

IN STRANGE COMPANY.

A contributor to the Paris Figaro tells a wonderful story of his having visited a little town in England during race week, and finding every inn and lodginghouse in the place so full of visitors that his only resource seemed to be to pass the night at a belle étoile. As a last chance, however, he addressed himself to a policeman, who made a sign to him to follow, and conducted him to a house of sinister appearance down a narrow court, where doubtful characters could be seen passing and re-passing in the dusk. An old hag, crooning over a fire, got up at their entrance, and with a smoky lamp lighted them upstairs into a big square room, in which a dozen dark forms were stretched upon the floor. Suddenly the new-comer caught sight of the shining barrel of a revolver that lay handy near one of the sleepers, and instinctively he made towards the door. But his conductors and lamp had disappeared. He laid himself down in his clothes upon a mattress, with his hand in the pocket that contained his portemonnaie, but naturally enough could not sleep a wink, for fear of his bed-fellow jumping up and demanding his money or his life. He listened now and then, as one or the other stirred, but they were fast asleep. At break of day the tall figures rose up and began to chat with one another, and then the nervous stranger found out that he had been passing the night surrounded by policemen.

EXTRAORDINARY INCIDENT ON THE CHANNEL TELEPHONE LINE.

A telegram to the Standard, reads as follows:—"An extraordinary accident occurred yesterday with the London-Paris telephone office in the Palais de la Bourse. One of the employees, a gentleman named Weller, wished to communicate with the London office on a matter of service. He had already rung up the English officials, and the bell having sounded in reply, took up the receivers and put them to his ears, when he suddenly sustained a shock of electricity of such severity that it threw him staggering backwards against the door of the telephone cabinet, which, not having been properly fastened, flew open, with the result that he was thrown heavily to the ground. He was injured on the forehead and across his right eye, but whether the bruises were due to the fall or were caused by the instrument is not certain. Mr. Weller suffered from the shock, but was able to resume duty this morning. It appears from inquiries that similar accidents, although less serious, have occurred at this telephone office on several previous occasions. The officials attribute them to lightning striking the wire either at San Gatte where the submarine cable ends, or at the terminus of the land wire on the Palais de la Bourse. Such accidents, it is declared, can easily be prevented by the simple expedient of erecting lightning conductors at the point where the cable comes ashore and at the terminus in Paris. On this side the land line between London and the cable is thoroughly and efficiently guarded with lightning protectors so that such an accident would be impossible here.

CLIPPINGS.

An east complaint has been paid by the French Department of Public Health to the management of certain matters in England. The Director of that Department, in his last report, says that it French sanitation generally were as good as English, the annual number of deaths in France would be less by about 130,000 than it now is. Seeing that the population of France is almost stationary, and even threatens to decrease, the improvement of the sanitary conditions of that country seem to be a very pressing matter. The saving of 130,000 lives a year would result in the steady increase of the population. England, herself is not, however, as well situated as she should be. The average annual death rate per 1,000 is about 23. If we could reduce the general death rate to that at Birkenhead—18 per 1,000—we should also be able to effect an annual saving in England and Wales of about 130,000 lives; and we should raise the average length of life from about 43 1/2 to over 55 years.

Mr. Moncre D. Conway, in the course of a recent article in the Daily Graphic, perpetrated one of the most extraordinary confusions of metaphor of which any professedly literary man has ever been guilty. It was, of course, a slip; but it is not the less astonishing or amusing on that account. Said he, speaking of America, "Our eggs of hope are not all one basket; but they all may be useful—whether flowering in New England authors or California cowboys." The egg that flowers in America, where strange things are common. There is there, it is true, a vegetable called an egg plant; but it is the plant, not the egg, that flowers.

Lawyers are great sticklers for accuracy of verbal expression, and few people who, as witnesses, have undergone the pains of cross-examination in court have escaped the experience of having been directly or indirectly charged by counsel with misuse of the English language. It is, therefore, pleasant to be occasionally able to retaliate by convicting a lawyer or two of the very vice which is so generally held up to scorn by the profession. A New South Wales lawyer, in the course of an opening speech, recently said: "Gentlemen of the jury—the case for the Crown is a mere skeleton, for, gentlemen, as I shall presently show you, it has neither flesh, blood, nor bones in it." At about the same time a legal member of the Victorian Parliament was informing the Supreme Court of that Colony that "an oral agreement is not worth the paper it is written on." But both these sagacious are far behind the Irish barrister who said, "Gentlemen of the jury—it will be for you to say whether the defendant shall be allowed to come into court with unblushing footsteps and with the cloak of hypocrisy in his mouth and to take three bullocks out of my client's pocket with impunity."

The comforts of English home life are proverbial all the world over. Most of them are probably due to the fact that English people do not, as a rule, live in apartments or in flats, and are, in consequence, masters of their own castles. How can the flat dweller be comfortable when the flat dweller above him has a child who is learning to play the piano, or a flat dweller below him whose cook is eternally boiling cabbages, and is too ignorant or too careless to adopt measures for suppressing the horrible smell that accompanies the improper performance of that culinary operation? You may have an amateur carpenter who saws wood at midnight, or an amateur hornblower who blows with the lark, or an amateur vocalist who screeches while you are at family prayers, or an amateur chemist who periodically has explosions on his premises—any of these you may have as your neighbours; yet you are powerless against them so long as you live in apartments or in a flat. An Englishman is not half an Englishman while he shares a house with a stranger, or while he has to take his chief meals abroad.

Several periodical publications have, during the past few years, adopted the plan of offering to their surviving representatives of any of their readers who may be accidentally killed sums of varying amounts, the sole condition generally being that a copy or a portion of the current issue of the periodical shall be upon the person of the victim at the time of his death. A German manufacturer, with a genius for advertising, has modified this device in such a manner as to have already created an enormous demand for the particular wares in which he deals. These wares are metallic trousers buttons. If, wearing six of these buttons, you come to fatal grief in a railway accident, the manufacturer will pay to your heirs £50; if wearing twelve, £100; and so on in proportion. The inducement to wear superfluous buttons is so great that we may presently expect to find it "the thing" in Germany to wear metallic buttons on coats and waistcoats as well as on the garments to which they have hitherto been more specially appropriated. Women too, will probably wear these buttons; for German woman is proverbially careful and far-seeing. There is an opportunity for some British manufacturer to introduce an insurance hairpin, insurance gloves, or an insurance purse.

JAPANESE DWARF TREES.

In Tokio are to be seen some curious dwarf plants two feet in height or less, and growing in porcelain vases. These are miniature and perfectly proportioned trees of various species, some of them according to the labels, being 100 and 150 years old. They are the result of careful culture and training. At an early age they are planted in small pots, and the upward growth is interrupted continually and is forced to grow horizontally by strings and sticks, which become very numerous in course of time. These plants and the care of them are handed down from father to son. Among some that are to be seen may be mentioned an 80-year-old maple which is 20 inches high; a 10-year-old, 12 inches; and a group of retinospora 80 years old and 8 to 12 inches high. If allowed to grow freely they would have attained a height of about 10 feet. Some of the pines were 150 years old, and the oldest was but 24 inches high.

Weatherby's Business

(A SHORT STORY.)

The music was bad enough, early as it was, but after supper it was worse, when the trombone grew confused between his instrument and the bottle by his side, distending his cheeks till his eyes almost started from his head in his efforts to extract a sound from the latter, or, equally vainly, tried to imbibe spirituous sustenance from the former, until, warned by the grins of his scoffing colleagues that there was something wrong, he tried to make up for lost time by a series of such wild blasts and heart-rending groans as, from a humorous if not from an artistic point of view, were a huge success.

I was so intent on this little farce that for a time I lost sight of my own anomalous position, and it was not until after a more than usually Wagnerian and "Walpurgis Night"-effect that I heard a voice behind me saying:

"Yes, isn't it horrible? It's quite too—", and, turning round in surprise, I found myself face to face with my cousin Bell.

"Why, Jack!" she cried, while her eyes brightened with pleasure, "you here! How awfully nice! But how—", I mean, why didn't you let me know, or give me a dance?"

I stammered out, awkwardly enough, something about never having expected to meet her there, and then my face flushed up and I knew I must be looking an awful fool, as I recollected how I came to be there myself. I would have given all I had in the world, which was certainly not much when you come to think of it, to have sunk anywhere out of her sight. I believe I half thought of running away, but I found I could not with those sparkling, clear-sighted eyes looking straight into mine and holding them magnetically until, what with the strangeness of our meeting and the awkwardness of my position, I stared helplessly back like a paralysed patient under hypnotic or mesmerist influence.

"Well, why don't you say something," she flashed out impatiently. "Why don't you say how awfully glad you are to see me, and don't I think this a delightful ball, and won't I go into the—the conservatory and cool down; though, now I think of it, you don't appear to need that altogether."

And she glanced at me mischievously, yet with a subtle suggestion of something underlying her mockery that set me wondering what she meant.

Then to her partner she said: "This comes of being a relative. My cousin Jack—Mr. Grayne, and, as we have not met for so long, would you mind very much if I—"

And she laid her hand on my arm, and we made for the conservatory. "How on earth do you come to know these people?" I asked desperately at last, by way of breaking the silence, which only grew the more embarrassing the more it was prolonged.

"Oh, Lily Dawson and I were at school together. And you?" But I was prepared by this time, so I answered readily enough:

"Oh, quite as simply. Through a friend."

"And why did you go away and leave no address?"

"That is equally simple. After Paris, I had no idea where I was going."

"Still, there are post-offices and telegraph-wires almost everywhere now. But I suppose you were not short of money then, so there was nothing to write or telegraph for."

"This was too cruel, and I fancy I must have looked hurt, for she went on quickly:

"Poor old Jack! I did not mean—and yet I don't know, I rather think I did. But haven't you heard?"

"If you mean—", I began.

"Why, of course, about the money."

"Oh yes. I found the letter and the—the shilling waiting at my rooms."

"Really! How prompt! So you have got your alibi. I am not so fortunate; I—"

But this was brutal, and I turned away, as she went on remorselessly: "I think there are a few forms and ceremonies still to be gone through. I believe, but I am not sure, that you will have to appear somewhere, and sign, and declare, and deliver something—whatever the lawyers choose to tell you, I suppose; for nobody living can quite make it out."

"Oh, you are mistaken. I have nothing whatever to—"

"No, I am not. You are not to escape so easily as you think; nor am I. Having money left you is by no means as nice as you suppose; it's a horrid bore, in fact. There are all sorts of tiresome, disagreeable conditions and—and people to be taken into account."

"Oh, if it is at all necessary for your interests, of course I am perfectly willing to do what is right; but I think I might have been—"

"Let off? Yes, that is what I thought; but neither of us is a free agent, or so it would appear."

"No, I suppose not," I answered coldly.

"You are not over-polite; you might at least pretend to take an interest in my affairs."

"There is no need to pretend—I broke out passionately, then stopped just as abruptly, for I was feeling both sore and angry at her persistent pursuit of the subject.

"Oh, just as you please, only I would not be spiteful if I were you. Being an heiress is not all pleasure, I can assure you."

"No?" I said indifferently.

"Indeed no. How would you like to be left by will until called for, like a parcel?—to have no choice of your own, but to be told you must marry just one particular man out of all the rest, whether you like him or not or hand over all the money to—somebody else?"

"Oh, so few people do marry the man or woman they want, that perhaps it won't really matter in the end."

"Oh, I don't suppose it will—in the end; but it's the beginning that's so—so difficult." And again I caught the gleam of mockery in her sunny eyes.

"Why, don't you like him?" asked feeling still more annoyed, but trying not to show it.

"Like whom?"

"The man you are going to marry."

"Oh, I have not said I would marry him yet," she replied.

"But I suppose you mean to?" I remarked cynically.

"Well, that depends. You see, it is so soon, and he has not even asked me, and I—", Here she lost her self-possession, and turned away quite unaccountably confused and I wondered what on earth she was driving at, when:

"Oh, why, here you are! I've been looking for you everywhere. I do so want to—but I'm afraid I'm interrupting you."

And the speaker—a lank, bony girl, dressed in a skimpy teal-green satin gown, tied round with a coral sash with the largest bow and ends I had ever seen—smiled at us with an exaggerated playfulness for which I longed to throw something at her.

"Oh, why—don't you know—", began Bell, then stopped in astonishment, for neither of us made any response. Then she faltered out, "This is my cousin Jack."

"How nice! But how—", Then she, too, stopped, embarrassed, to stammer something about she should have known me any where from Bell's description.

(To be concluded to-morrow.)
