about 60,000. The Manager of the Russian Department of the Deutsche Bank was on leave of absence, otherwise the malpractices would probably have been discovered sooner.

It is said that the Deutsche Bank will recognise the transactions as binding, but it is not yet known whether besides the July liabilities there may not be other engagements to meet which will fall due later.

THE FRENCH CENSUS.

The French Census Returns are published. The population of France is now 38,095,150, while that of the United Kingdom is 37,740,283.

Lord Coleridge has been delivering himself with his usual fluency on the subject of holding one's tongue. A well-known and eminent Chief Justice once said in his hearing 'Sir, you cannot conceive with the utmost effort of the imagination the strength of the language I am keeping back.'

Considerable sensation has been caused in San Sebastian, by the Spanish Minister of Justice having instructed the Prefect of San Sebastian to put a stop to gambling at the Casino and cafes of this fashionable watering-place just at the season when bathing and bull-fighting are beginning.

THE CENSUS.

The first report on the census contains some additional information to that which has already been published. It seems that although the female population is in a majority of 899,778, there are more males than females born.

THE FRAUDS ON THE DEUTSCHE BANK.

An occurrence such as was discovered yesterday at the Deutsche Bank here has not excited the German financial world since the great frauds on the Austrian Kreditanstalt and the Lower Austrian Disconto Gesellschaft, and the enormous swindles of the two directors, Jerusalem and Winkelmann, on the Leipzig Disconto Gesellschaft.

HOW TO AVERT STRIKES.

The evidence given before the Labour Commission from workmen and employers engaged in the mining industries is very significant, in view of the increasing cry for legislative interference with the conditions of adult labour.

His Wedding Day.

(BY GEORGE R. SIMS.)

John Winterdyke was still a fine-figure of a man, and many a time had been told by the fond mammas of marriageable daughters that it was positively wicked of him to remain a bachelor.

«I shall never marry,» he had replied laughingly, and he honestly believed that he never would. But his fate came to him at last. One day, at the office, his head cashier, Mr. Marsden, was taken suddenly ill. He was seized with a fainting fit, and would have fallen but for timely assistance.

«I will go with you, my dear fellow,» he said; «you are not fit to go alone, and your wife and daughter would be alarmed to see you as you are. Let me go and assure them that it has not been a serious attack.» Mr. Winterdyke not only accompanied his cashier home, but he insisted upon staying until the doctor had been fetched and had given his assurance that it was merely an attack of vertigo, which might have arisen from very simple causes.

Mr. Winterdyke found the family of his cashier a most charming one. Mrs. Marsden was a lady in every sense of the word, and the two daughters, Lottie and Katie, were delightful girls. Kate was only sixteen, but Lottie, the elder, was twenty-two. John Winterdyke stayed and talked with the family for an hour, and in that one hour the mischief was done to his heart which all the years before had failed to accomplish.

The staid, sober City merchant of forty-nine fell violently in love, there and then, with his cashier's daughter.

That evening, in his lonely chamber, John agreed with himself that it was an absurdity; that, at his age, he ought to know better; that forty-nine had no business to fall in love with twenty-two; but none of his arguments could alter the fact which he himself fully recognized—that he was in love. He visited his invalid cashier on Sunday, just to see if he was better; he insisted that his cashier should take a week's holiday, and during that week he called three times. Mrs. Marsden and the girls both declared he was very handsome. And then—well, then John tried to cure himself of what he called his «insanity,» but it was stronger than himself, and he invented excuses to call at the house. He had heard that Mrs. Marsden was fond of birds, and he took her a pair of canaries, which a friend had given him, saying that he knew they would be better taken care of by the young ladies than by his housekeeper. And then he found that he was always having tickets for concerts for which he had no use, and he gave them to Marsden as he knew his daughters were fond of music, and at these concerts the young ladies and their mamma generally found Mr. Winterdyke in the seat next to them.

But John Winterdyke was too honourable a man to continue these little subterfuges long, and so one day, after he had known the Marsdens for about three months, he called his cashier into his private office, and, blushing and stammering like a school-boy, told him that he loved his daughter Lottie, and that he would ask her to be his wife if he thought she could care sufficiently for him to give him a hope that one day she would share his home.

Richard Marsden pretended to be very much astonished. He hastened to assure his employer that he was flattered and honored, and that he could not have hoped for such a brilliant future for his child, and he promised to talk the matter over with his wife, and let Mr. Winterdyke know on the following day if it would be advisable for him to mention the fact to Lottie. For the first time in his life, John Winterdyke passed a sleepless night, and the following morning, to the astonishment of his housekeeper, he scarcely touched his breakfast. He hoped and yet he feared. Would the fair young girl of two-and-twenty entertain the idea of a husband of forty-nine? Had she perhaps a lover already, or some little romance of her own of which her father as yet knew nothing?

But all John's fears and doubts were set at rest when his cashier gave him a little note from Mrs. Marsden. It was as follows:—«Dear Mr. Winterdyke,—My husband has told me the news, which, I confess, had not astonished me. It has been evident to me for some time that you admired my daughter. Lottie is a good girl and will make a good wife, but neither I nor her father will attempt to influence a decision on which the happiness of her future life depends. It is from her lips you must receive your answer, and you have our full permission to ask for it. I may add, and I do so sincerely, that you have our hearty sympathy and our best wishes.—Yours sincerely, CHARLOTTE MARSDEN.»

That afternoon Mr. Winterdyke paid a formal visit to the Marsdens, and presently Katie and her mother withdrew and he was left alone with Lottie. Then, trembling, confused he stammered out his awful and waited to know his fate. The tears were in his eyes when he had finished—tears of which the strong man need not have been ashamed, for his heart was full. He stooped his head to hide them and so he did not see the flush fade from Lottie's face and her lip tremble as she tried to speak. He did not see that for a moment the girl's cheeks were as pale as death, and that her hand clutched at the little table in the window for support. He saw nothing—he only heard her sweet voice falter, «Mr. Winterdyke, I know how good a man you are, and how noble a man you are—my parents have told me. I am sure that you really love me, and I will be your wife.» «My wife!» John Winterdyke, looking up as he spoke the words, brushed away the tears of joy that dimmed his eyes, and, taking the young girl's hand in his, bent down and kissed it tenderly. «My darling,» he said, «my life shall be devoted to your happiness.» It was not very romantic, it was not the action of young lover, but the words came from the strong man's heart, and as he bent his head again to kiss the little hand that still lay in his broad palm, his lips murmured a prayer to Heaven that he might be worthy of the sacred trust which from that day forth was his—the sacred trust of a young girl's life and happiness.

Christ Church, Falkland Islands. Bishop Stirling will feel very grateful to friends in Montevideo who may see their way to aid him in completing the erection of the above Church. The Architect is Sir Arthur Blomfield and the building is progressing under the direction of Mr. Vinnell, foreman of the works. At least $1000 are required beyond the sum already raised, and for these Bishop Stirling appeals lest the works should be stopped. The population of the Islands is English, and numbers about two thousand. Of these some eight hundred reside in Stanley where the Church is being erected. Contributions will be thankfully received by the Bishop, 1221 Calle Paraná, Buenos Aires, or by A. J. Towers Esq., in Montevideo. The following contributions are thankfully acknowledged. W. E.
