POLITICAL NOTES.

Matters political are exceedingly quiet for the moment, and almost the only topic occupying attention is the programme of the celebrations and festivities for August 25th, which seems to be awakening more enthusiasm than is generally the case. It will be time enough to repeat the details when the programme is definitely arranged.

It has been decided to hold the «Fête of Trees,» about which there has been much talk of late, on Tuesday, September 18, a national anniversary, though not a general holiday. The date falls conveniently for the purpose in the early spring. Arrangements will be made for the participation of all the public school children and of the junior university students.

A fourth call has been issued for tenders for the purveying of the Flores Island Lazaret. Tenders will be opened on August 7. It remains to be seen whether this call will prove more efficacious than its predecessors.

SOUTH AMERICAN WOOL.

GRAVE COMPLAINTS FROM PURCHASERS.

(The following Article, which will be found of great importance to all wool-growers in the River Plate, is contributed by «An Expert Correspondent» to the South American Journal of June 30th. Although it is of considerable length, we intend to reproduce it in extenso.)—

Ever since South American wool began to be freely imported into British and Continental markets, all manufacturers have had just cause for complaint against the nature and character of Argentine wools, and with the lapse of time this complaint, instead of being removed, grows stronger and stronger still. One would have thought, with the spread of science and knowledge in the art of sheep-breeding and wool-growing, that South American pastoralists, in whose interests alone this article is written, would long ago have ceased those practices, the continuance of which is sure to be attended with disastrous results upon the value of the clip. Let it be clearly understood that we offer no complaints against South American wool itself; that is, when it is grown pure and simple, without being damaged by deleterious dressings, which, instead of calling forth, as they should, the strongest condemnation of the agricultural officials of the Argentine Government, are not only countenanced, but actually recommended by them. It will be the object of this paper to point out the mistakes in treating the growing fleece, and to offer such evidence as cannot be gainsaid, in the hope that the warning may come in time and be regarded.

It does, indeed, seem quite an inexplicable coincidence that South Africa and South America should be sailing in the same boat in the adoption of practices which are acknowledged by every practical wool expert in the world to be highly injurious to the wool fibre. The writer of this, having been bred and brought up in the wool trade, and for a lifetime watched it through every stage of manufacture, saw some years ago that, by dipping their sheep in a mixture of lime and sulphur, Cape sheepmen were operating for the ruin of the pastoral industry Knowing, too, that generally they were ignorant of the great causes that were keeping their wool prices down to an abnormally low level, we set to work to point out a few defects and some reasons why Cape wools were figuring so low. The fact of the case was that British manufacturers, through repeated bad working results of the Cape wools, had begun to look upon them with strong suspicion, until they were only saleable at prices which were far below those current for similar wools grown in Australia. So many manufacturers, by using Cape wools, had had their materials and fabrics spoiled, that many had totally discarded the use of Cape wools, feeling that the only safe way of escape from loss, and to insure satisfaction to their customers for the manufactured article, was by using no wool which during growth had been brought in contact with any injurious mixture. In a special article given to a leading Cape paper, and another to the «Farmer and Stock-breeder,» of London, in its issue of February 20th, 1899, we made statements and allegations concerning Cape wools which were so astounding as to command the attention of the agricultural officials of the Government of Cape Colony. The statements we then made so impressed these gentlemen that they determined to institute a special investigation among Bradford and Yorkshire wool-users generally, to see if our allegations were correct, the Agent-General of Cape Colony in London himself pursuing the inquiry. The whole of the Bradford and London wool-brokers in one solid voice said «Amen» to us, and they moreover pointed out the disrepute and bad name which Cape wools had earned for themselves among users of the staple equally in England, on the Continent, and in America. The result was that the agricultural officials, confronted with the consensus of opinion expressed as to the deleterious effects upon the wool fibre, re-considered their position in regard to their recommendations of compulsory dipping in lime and sulphur in cases of scab, and permitted the use of other remedies, harmless to the fleece, but equally efficacious. We now come to levy against South American wools the same complaints as we did against Cape wools, and supported by the testimony of an undivided opinion of the wool trade of England, the Continent, and America, we assert that, among the causes which are making against the popularity of Argentine wools, there is no more fruitful source of suspicion than the recommended use of lime and sulphur and tobacco dips in the dipping of sheep.

It need hardly be pointed out that, in these days of excessive competition and great production of wool in every country of the world, that the reputation for good quality and perfect fitness for fabric production is no small item, and a reputation once lost is seldom or ever regained. For this reason the reputation of Argentine wools ought to be more jealously guarded, and nothing should be done which can possibly put further limits to their popularity. Now, what are the vital characteristics of a good wool-clip?

(1) It should be sound and firm of staple.

(2) It should scour well, and should scour readily.

(3) It should cause the comber, carder, and spinner a minimum of difficulty.

(4) It should readily take any dye and every dye used upon such wools.

(5) The result in a fabric should be rich and regular in colour.

Surely it cannot be necessary to emphasise the fact that success or failure in these respects, even to a limited extent, means a serious deterioration in value.

Looking at the above, which are indeed important essentials, and which must be found in all wools of first class character and growth, we find that it is exactly here that Argentine lime and sulphur, and to some extent, tobacco-dipped wools show a pronounced deficiency. This is no new or modern failing which has recently been found in South American wools, but a matter which has lately become more pronounced, and which we have every reason to expect that, if the deficiency be not pointed out, will not only spread, but cause serious loss to the wool-growers of the River Plate. Realising that the subject is pregnant with most vital consequences, the writer was led to take steps, the results of which will, we trust, be a lesson Argentine estancieros will take seriously to heart.

The Late Mr. Wingate.

We quote the following from the South American Journal of June 23.—

We regret to have to announce the death, on the 18th inst, at River Plate House, Finsbury Circus, London, E.C., after a few hours illness, of Mr. Robert Wingate, of 9, Cedars Road, Clapham Common, until lately and for 28 years Resident Engineer of the Central Railway of Uruguay in Montevideo. He retired from active service on 1st July, 1899, since which date he has been on the pension fund of the company. Mr. Wingate was only 67 years of age, and took a keen and deep interest in the company's affairs up to the very last. Indeed, we understand that he came up to its office on the day of his sudden death on purpose to go through the inward mails, but the journey up to town seems to have tried him somewhat, for, arriving there, he complained of difficulty in breathing, and, after lingering for some five hours, expired in the secretary's office. Fortunately, however, there was time to get his wife up to the City, and she had thus the mournful consolation of being with him at the close of his useful life. Like so many of the zealous officers of this company, it would appear that Mr. Wingate practically died in harness. The deceased had many dear friends, both here and in the River Plate, by whom news of his death will be received with unfeigned sorrow. He was highly respected and esteemed by all who knew him.

Literary Malapropisms.

The Outlook prints the following list of titles of books as they were written in booksellers' orders:—

Boy, Muscle and Peat (Bog Myrtle and Peat).

Founders and Heretics (Frondes Agrestes).

Pharaoh's Life of Christ (Farrar's Life of Christ.)

Boy Hero of Walthamstow (Boy Hero, by Walsham How).

Harry Stockle's Masterpiece (Aristotle's Masterpiece).

Across the Russian's Nose (Across Russian Snows).

Improver's Story (Improvisatore).

God Aim us by a Farmer (Gaudeamus, by Farmer).

It would almost seem as if the individual who wrote for Pharaoh's Life of Christ was making fun of the bookseller. That booksellers are able to take care of themselves in that respect is proved by the answer given to the lady who went into a shop to buy a copy of the volume of poems just published by the late Duke of Argyll. «No, ma'am,» was the reply, «not in stock; but we have a copy of the «Indiscretions of a Duchess.»

Some New Uses for Milk.

From the casein derived from milk by coagulation, we are told by L'Industrie Laitière (Paris,) is now made an artificial ivory known as lactite, from which are manufactured billiard balls, tooth-brush handles, combs, &c. The same journal informs us that by treatment of the same casein «certain manufacturers prepare a paste or powder that can be used instead of eggs in some kinds of cookery, while costing only half as much. The casein combined with alkaline bases makes a hydraulic cement. The curd is cut into bits which are dried rapidly and then finely powdered. The powder is mixed with twenty per cent of pulverised quicklime Finally, curdled milk has been for some time used in whitewashing buildings and to prevent scaling. For this purpose it is mixed with lime so as to make a thick liquid. Lactarine is a preparation of almost pure casein, which, dissolved in ammonia, is used to thicken colours employed in cotton-printing.

THE WAR.

The messages have made no further reference to the important battle which was said to have commenced at Middleburg on Saturday, and we are beginning to think that it was an invention. News comes, however, of fighting in other quarters, of which we give particulars below.

Lord Roberts reports from Pretoria that Gen. Methuen continued his advance after occupying Heckport, and on the 20th had an encounter with the rearguard of the enemy at Zindsfontein, losing only one killed and one wounded. On the 21st he attacked the Boers at Oliponts Nek, defeating them with heavy losses, his own being small. This has enabled him to relieve Rustemberg and unite with Baden Powell. On Sunday Col. Bruce Hamilton, with a battery of the Cameronians and 500 mounted infantry, captured an excellent position at Spitzary. His losses were 3 Cameronians killed; Col. Keith Hamilton of the Oxford regiment, Capt. Brown, Lieut. Stewart and 13 men of the Cameronians, wounded.

An unofficial message gives the following. Since the 16th Gen. Broadwood's troops had been following up a Boer commando, and on the 19th there was a sharp combat at Palmietfontein. The Boers left 8 dead upon the field. The British losses were 5 killed and 76 wounded. Darkness prevented pursuit, and under cover of this the enemy returned to Palmietfontein and passed by Paardekaal. (This is not very intelligible.) General Broadwood is now on the way to Roodeval where there are remounts and 3000 reinforcements. The Boer commando is said to be about 1000 strong, with 4 guns. Steijn and De Wet are supposed to be with them.

A message of Boer origin, from Machadorp, announces the arrival there of 200 new British prisoners captured at Dordespruit where, according to the Boer accounts, the British lost 400 killed and many wounded. Assertions also appear, but not from reliable sources, of the Boers having cut the lines at Honingspruit and Potchefstroom, and having cut off communications with Pretoria generally. Another not very credible tale is that the Boers at Harrismith are preparing a fresh invasion of Natal.

It now transpires that Mrs. Kruger and a number of Boer women and children who were left on the hands of the British, were expelled from Pretoria last week, by orders of Lord Roberts. They have arrived at Barberton, on the frontier of the Portuguese colony.

CHINA.

There was little fresh in yesterday's messages. Further assurances have been made by Chinese ministers or officials of the safety of the diplomats in Pekin, and according to one account they are being conveyed to Tien-Tsin under escort of loyal troops. The situation is best summed up by Mr. Brodrich's statement in the Commons on Monday evening. He said that the Government was without trustworthy information respecting the fate of the diplomats, and that the declarations of the Chinese Government and the Chinese Ministers abroad could only be believed when they had been confirmed by telegrams from the British functionaries in China.

There is again a report that the Empress has fled from Pekin; it is now said to Hsian-fu.

Railway communication between Taku and Tien-Tsin has been restored, and fresh troops are on the way to the latter, where preparations are being made for the expedition to Pekin. There seems no certainty when this will start or who will command it. (General Paralysis continues in command?)

Disorders and destruction of foreign property are reported from the north of Szetchein (?)

A British detachment has been attacked by a large Chinese force near Wei Hai-Wei. The assailants were repulsed with heavy loss.

Martial law has been proclaimed by the Russian Government in the military districts of Siberia and Turkestan, and the reserves of the districts have been called out. Col. Stoessel, second in command of the Russians troops at Tien-Tsin, is said to be wounded.

The French Government has decided to send the following forces to China; 9 batallions of marine infantry, 4 of Zouaves, 3 of infantry, 4 squadrons of cavalry, and 10 batteries of artillery.

The Boxers have assumed an aggressive attitude in the province of Honan, and have destroyed several (railway?) stations. The European and N. American missionaries were fortunately able to escape.

From Washington it is reported that Mr. McKinley is disposed to offer his mediation in China, but there is no official statement yet.

SUNDRIES.

—MANY THANKS.—We quote, with a becoming blush of modesty, the following very friendly notice from the Rio News of June 18. On the 1st inst. THE MONTEVIDEO TIMES celebrated its 12th anniversary, and its editor improves the opportunity to remind his readers that during all these years he has been able to do no more than make a bare living. This is to be sincerely regretted. Among all our exchanges there is not one more deserving of cordial and liberal support than THE MONTEVIDEO TIMES. Mr. Denstone has done his work conscientiously and fearlessly. He has neither truckled to the government, nor to any aggressive private interests. He has discussed the affairs of the day with an open mind and independent spirit, and his opinions are always entitled to confidence. Such newspapers are rare, and it is therefore a duty to support them, for the good they do can not be overestimated. It would reflect positive discredit on the English colony of Montevideo were Mr. Denstone obliged to suspend publication for want of support.

—QUARANTINES.—Judging from certain references in the telegrams from both Buenos Aires and Rio Janeiro, negotiations are on foot between the Argentine and Brazilian authorities for the general suppression of quarantines which of late have grown into such a serious plague to the River Plate, and the substitution of more modern and less prejudicial prophylactic measures. In fact, in Buenos Aires the feeling against quarantines has been growing for some time past, and the campaign against them, commenced by the English papers, has been vigorously taken up by the native press, which, in this matter has shown more enlightenment than the native Montevideo papers. This is certainly good news, and the proposed reform cannot take place too soon. We do not know whether the health authorities here have been consulted in the matter, but that is of little importance, for whatever arrangement is made, they can only resist at the expense of cutting themselves off with communication, social and commercial, on both sides, and, unreasonable as they are on the subject of quarantines, they will hardly dare to go to that length; or, if they did, the matter would soon be settled by turning them out of office and placing more sensible men in their place. Anyhow, there is the pleasing prospect that before long we will have seen the last of the quarantine plague in its worst aspects.

—CASINO.—The debut has taken place of Farini, a juggler who recently made a great hit in Buenos Aires. Miss Maisie Turner, an English singer, gives sentimental plantation melodies in pleasing style, and dances a capital breakdown. The French duettists Aubin-Lionel are amusing, though not particularly artistic. Miss Wandini increases in favor daily. The rest of the programme is decidedly feeble, and we recommend the management to improve it.

—REMOVAL.—The London offices of the North Western of Uruguay and the Midland Uruguay Railway Companies have been removed to 71 Finsbury Pavement, London, E.C.

—LUCKY MAN.—A Buenos Aires contemporary congratulates the captain of the British steamer Lecoine on winning $80,000 in the lottery. He bought the ticket directly he landed at La Plata. On Saturday his ship was decorated in honour of his luck.

—DEATHS.—From the B. A. Standard. Our readers will learn with sorrow of the death of Mr. Alfred H. Moore, brother of Mr. Reginald Moore, which took place on Saturday from cancer in the throat.—We regret to announce the death of Capt. James H. Smeltzer of the British barkantine «Abeona,» of Lenenburg, U. S., which took place on Saturday in the British Hospital from congestion of the brain.

—FOOTBALL. It has been arranged to play the test match between the C.U.R.C.C. and Albion Club, mentioned in our last, at the Gran Parque Central, on Sunday next. Details in due time.

—RETURN. — Mr. and Mrs. E. Cooper, Miss Cooper and Mr. Geoffrey Cooper, are expected in the R. M. S. «Nile», due next Saturday.

—CONCERT. — This evening the pupils of the Liszt Institute will give one of their always popular and admirable concerts. An excellent programme of instrumental music has been arranged, and a large number of junior pupils of both sexes are taking part.

—DEATH.—The death occurred on Monday night, almost suddenly, of Col. Luis Paravis, for many years head of the Detective Police Department. He was a most active, intelligent and upright officer, who enjoyed general respect and confidence, and his loss is much regretted.

—FIRE.—An important fire is reported to be raging in the wool deposits of the Customs House at Hamburg. The tetegrams give no further particulars.

—NAVAL.—Orders have been given to the British Channel fleet to concentrate at Portsmouth on August 13 for the usual autumn manœuvres. It is expected that her Majesty will attend in person at the naval review which will conclude the manœuvres.

—QUARANTINE.—On account of the reappearance of bubonic pest in Paraguay, the health authorities have declared quarantine of ten days against Asuncion and five days against all other Paraguayan ports, with the usual prohibition of the importation of articles likely to carry infection. It is to be presumed that this will only be temporary, as the Argentine authorities are making arrangements for the prompt substitution of less prejudicial measures, and those here will have to do the same whether they like it or not.

—JOHN BULL IN PARIS.—«M. B.» writes from Paris: «There can be no greater mistake than to suppose that anti-English feeling in France is likely to spoil our enjoyment of the Exhibition, by far the greatest artistic treat as yet called by that name. From all classes and on all sides, English visitors meet with the utmost courtesy and kindness, alike residents, functionaries, and tradesfolk vieing with each other in hospitality and politeness. Never throughout my twenty-five years' experience of France have I found the best characteristics of the nation more strikingly brought out. French people are all proud, as indeed well they may be, of this crowning triumph of civilisation, this festival of peace and progress amid such troubled and threatening times.

—ROUGH ON DOGS.—A man was recently sitting in the Park with a dog of very doubtful breed crouching beside him. Two little urchins stopped, and looked intently at the animal for a few moments. Then one said to the other, «Bill, I wish that was mine, don't you?» The man hearing the remarks of the boys, and being somewhat pleased, inquired—«And what would you do with it if it were yours, eh?» The lad looked at his companion, and then, seeing that the coast was clear, wickedly replied, «I should sell it, and buy a dog.» After which he and his companion hurriedly left.

Such heavy rain and thunderstorms were experienced in London yesterday that cricket was quite impossible. At Derby, Yorkshire disposed of the local representatives for 69, and afterwards themselves made 101 for the loss of 7 wickets. Lancashire, at Nottingham, got considerably the better of the opening stages of their match with Notts; Mold was twice no-balled for throwing. Leicestershire and Middlesex met at Leicester, the home side scoring 164 for 6 wickets before play was stopped by showers.

An unusual scene was witnessed in the Court of the Lord Chief Justice yesterday, when, under an old Act, the Grand Jury of Middlesex were summoned to decide whether a true bill should be returned against a British official who was said to have committed an offence abroad. A true bill was in this instance returned.

SHORT STORY

AUNT DELIA'S DILEMMA.

CHAPTER III.

At the hour appointed, Tom duly presented himself in the dining-room, where Miss Delia received him with such marked consideration that her servants—ignorant of his relationship to their mistress—wondered not a little, and concluded that the fugitive Mr. Herbert Stevens's place was no longer vacant, and that that «she'd be adoptin' of this young feller next.» When she chose, no one could be more gracious and agreeable than Miss Delia, and Tom found her a most pleasant companion. Conversation rarely flagged, though, at the same time, it was by no means of an intimate, far less confidential, nature, and Tom faithfully adhered to his proposal that they should forget the relationship — though no doubt ignore would have been the better word—for the time. It was only when the meal was ended, and he rose to go, that she checked him, saying almost eagerly, «You will dine with me to night? I shall be quite alone.»

«I will do so with pleasure, Miss Deane»

«You may call me Aunt Delia, Tom 1—I am not quite such a churlish old woman as you think me.»

«Aunt Delia, I don't think you churlish at all. How could I? You have been very kind to me, far kinder than such a trespasser had any right to expect,» he replied, a good deal moved by her tone, yet man-like, anxious to avoid any display of feeling.

Tom's sketch progressed rapidly during that day and the next and so did his acquaintance with Miss Delia. Not only was he expected to lunch and dine with her; but she often joined him under the big tree on the lawn, and from a few friendly enquiries as to his work, they drifted easily into more intimate talk. She gradually learned all there was to know about him, with two exceptions; but they were weighty ones. He did not tell her of his engagement; he never spoke of his Cousin Maggie. Thus, her knowledge of him was, after all, but limited and incomplete; and Tom, as she pictured him, was a million miles away from the real Tom, whose motive for visiting her was still a mystery.

It was on the afternoon of the third day, and the young man felt that his visit must now soon draw to a close; so when Miss Delia presently came out—just to see how he was getting on—he electrified her by saying—«Only too well, I'm sorry to say. Two or three hours' work will finish this and then I must be off again.»

«So soon?» she said, wistfully. «But—wouldn't you like to take another sketch of the house, from the other side this time?»

«Oh, my dear aunt, I must not bother you any further! And—much as I should like to stay—I really ought to be moving on.»

«You cannot stay all your fortnight here; then? I had hoped that, perhaps—now we know each other better—»

«The fact is, I am not exactly a free agent. I heard this morning that a friend—the lady, in fact, to whom I am engaged——»

«You are engaged? My dear boy, you never told me!»

«There seemed no reason to do so. I did not know that it would interest you.

«Tom, I am interested in anything that concerns your happiness. But I do not wish to be intrusive. Tell me just as much, or as little, as you please.»

And Tom told her little enough. It was not a subject on which he ever waxed eloquent.

«She will be staying with friends at Bexton after to-morrow, and they have written to ask me to join them,» he said, after a few commonplace remarks. «I only got the letter this morning, so you see——»

«I see entirely! Then this will be our last evening. We must have a quiet talk after dinner, for—there is much I want to say to you.»

«And I to you; yes, Aunt Delia.»

To tell the truth, Tom would have been only too glad to stay on in this quiet spot, far from his fiancée, but a sense of loyalty to her made him resolutely refuse to do so, and he had no particular wish that she should know his present address. Explanations, therefore, on the score of another engagement were to be studiously avoided, and he was going home to morrow to tell Maggie the result of his visit before he started to join Edith, but what that result would be he hardly yet dared to think.

Dinner was rather a silent meal that evening, for both aunt and nephew felt more than a little anxious as to the «quiet talk» that was to follow it; and while Tom's efforts at conversation were spasmodic in the extreme, Miss Deane made none at all. She was too full of her own plans for his future to try to amuse him now.

And, after all, it was a seemingly careless remark of Tom's that at length precipitated matters.

«You have never asked me for whom my sketch is, Aunt Delia.»

She started «I thought—that it was for yourself.»

«No, it is not. It never occurred to me to want a sketch of a place I had never seen. Someone else suggested the idea to me, and the sketch is for her.»

«Her, Tom?»

«Yes, my Cousin Maggie.»

«Ah! Then she is the lady to whom you are engaged. I am glad of this, very glad. It will make everything so much easier.

«No, no, my dear aunt! I am not so happy! I mean— my Cousin Maggie—that is—the lady to whom I am engaged is Edith Spencer—no relation at all.»
